PROFILE

My research interests include landscape archaeology, the social structures of Minoan and Mycenaean civilisations (particularly social hierarchy, political organisation, economy, and religion), sealing practices, visual language, the interconnections between the Aegean and the Near East in the second millennium BCE, and modern strategies for managing and promoting cultural heritage. I have published on Bronze Age Greece, Egypt, and the Levant combining material and textual evidence and have participated in several excavations at major Bronze Age and Classical sites in Greece. Currently, I am the director of the interdisciplinary Koumasa Project aiming at the systematic study of the history and landscape of this major Minoan site.
